| Job Description       | Are you passionate about empowering educators and shaping the future of education? Do you thrive in collaborative environments and relish the challenge of managing complex projects and designing impactful learning experiences? If so, we invite you to explore this unique opportunity to join the Next Education Workforce team at Arizona State University's Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College (MLFTC).

Next Education Workforce™ staffing models leverage educator teams to improve student outcomes and teacher working conditions. Schools and systems partner with Arizona State University’s Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College to create learning environments where educators collaborate and students belong. ASU prepares education leaders to design and implement staffing changes that address the root causes of low and inequitable student outcomes and teacher shortages and burnout.

We seek a highly skilled Learning Experience Designer with project management expertise to join the Next Education Workforce Initiative. We are honored to work closely with K-12 systems, schools, and organizations to build teams of educators who provide deeper and personalized learning for all students.

We celebrate a start-up culture where initiative, creativity, and a willingness to embrace ambiguity are highly valued. If you thrive in a fast-paced environment, take the lead to explore new possibilities, and appreciate the challenge of building something remarkable from the ground up, we encourage you to join our team.

The campus location for this position is listed at ASU’s Tempe campus, but a remote work option would be available for qualified candidates residing outside the greater Phoenix area (Maricopa County). MLFTC at ASU supports flexible work options, ranging from alternate work schedules to hybrid and full remote work schedules, subject to approvals per ASU policy.
