

Vice-Dean and Professor, Division of Educational Leadership & Innovation Job #16371

Arizona State University's Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College is seeking a Vice-Dean and Professor in the Division of Educational Leadership and Innovation. The successful candidate will provide the intellectual and administrative leadership for the Division; whose 60 full-time faculty serve more than 3,500 undergraduate and graduate students in all of the College's master's and graduate certificate programs beyond initial teacher certification, as well as undergraduate degrees separate from teacher certification. In addition, the Vice-Dean will advance their own program of scholarship and have opportunities to collaborate with nationally recognized faculty in research and program development in a wide range of areas, including interdisciplinary projects with other ASU departments, schools, and colleges. The ideal candidate must be a thoughtful, articulate, inspiring leader who will work collaboratively with others across both the College and ASU. S/he will be a creative, highly analytical individual with strong abstract reasoning skills who can relate well to people at all levels of the organization, demonstrating excellent communication and active listening skills. The successful candidate will have experience in helping to shape and drive ideas forward while simultaneously managing a staff and the College toward desired outcomes. S/he will be a consensus builder who understands the importance of cultivating a congenial and cooperative working environment, someone who can bend when appropriate yet be firm and decisive when necessary.

Major responsibilities include: (1) providing intellectual leadership for the Division, collaborating with faculty to define and implement the unit's vision and priorities; (2) overseeing scheduling, budgeting and general management of the Division; (3) mentoring, supporting, and evaluating all tenured and non-tenured faculty and staff with primary appointments in the Division; (4) advancing the Division's research productivity, including supporting University, College, and Division opportunities to secure external funding; (5) maintaining a record of high quality, high impact scholarly productivity as demonstrated through peer-reviewed publications and presentations at national conferences; (6) collaborating on the growth of the Division and related programs; and (7) providing service to the institution, profession, and community, (8) be a strong, strategic partner to the Dean and senior leadership, serving as a critical member of the college's executive leadership team; (8) Candidate qualified for the rank of Full Professor must also be eligible for tenure at Arizona State University as evidenced by scholarly accomplishment.

This position reports to the Dean of the College and will serve for a three-year term to be renewed at the discretion of the Dean.
